Details of any specific conflict of interest.		Health Secretary Matt Hancock (centre) hailed the 'national success story' and reiterated that it was 'our way out of this pandemic'. Government (left, Boris Johnson, yesterday) data up to March 18 shows 49.9 per cent of adults had a first dose of the vaccine, with an estimated 73,000 more jabs needed to pass the halfway mark. Those figures are expected to be updated later today. Yesterday the vaccine drive hit a record high after 660,276 doses were dished out across the country in the previous 24 hours. It comes as a top British scientist who is leading Covid-19 vaccine research warned the Government faces a 'challenge' to deliver all second jabs within 12 weeks due to supply issues. Meanwhile Ursula von der Leyen threatened to halt exports of AstraZeneca vaccines if the EU does not receive its deliveries first, in a worsening row over delayed shipments that has caused international tensions. And a government scientist warned foreign trips are 'extremely unlikely' for Britons this s
